

the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are under 15 years of age is expected to increase from 1.2 billion to 1.5 billion, and the number of people aged 65 and over is expected to increase from 250 million to 450 million.

These changes in the world population structure are expected to have a significant impact on the world economy and society. The rapid growth of the young population will increase the demand for education, health care, and employment opportunities. At the same time, the aging population will increase the demand for social security and health care services.

Therefore, it is important for the world to pay attention to the changes in the world population structure and to take effective measures to deal with the challenges it brings. This includes increasing investment in education and health care, improving social security systems, and promoting economic growth and employment opportunities.

In conclusion, the world population structure is changing rapidly, and this will have a significant impact on the world economy and society. We need to pay attention to these changes and take effective measures to deal with the challenges they bring.
